"In Bahasa Indonesia-literally the language of Indonesia-the word hati symbolically translates to heart. Piggy-backed, hati hati means be careful. Be careful. In a myriad of ways that comprises the truth of my two-year residence in Surabaya... it suggested be very careful with your heart out there. Don't double-up servings of your love to anything because this country is wild and unpredictable and dangerously low on boring, sensible arrangements of events or logic. And I fucking double-loved it anyways... and loving something will always break your heart."

This story is about a 30-something woman reinventing herself in Indonesia. A divorce and subsequent move to Indonesia to teach English for two years became the inspiration for this collection of stories, originally published as blogs. Her jaunts in a tropical paradise were simultaneously journeys through love, insecurity, and other afflictions of the human condition. Written with wit and melancholy, these stories tell of a woman on a journey towards herself in one of the world's most wondrous countries.
